

Discussion Questions for The Lincoln Highway by Amor Towles

Choose several questions that you would like to discuss

1. How do you think Emmett, Duchess, Woolly, and Sally's various upbringings—particularly their relationships to their parents—have shaped them? How have their parents' choices influenced their own desires and ambitions? When you were eighteen, which aspects of your parents' lives did you hope to emulate, and which did you hope to cast aside?
2. Early in the novel, Emmett meets Sister Agnes, a nun who describes the faith of children, who look upon a miracle "with awe and wonder, yes, but without disbelief." From the context, it's fairly clear that Sister Agnes is referencing Billy in her remark. How would you describe Billy's personality? While he is the youngest and least experienced character in the novel, one could argue that he has the greatest influence on other characters. What is it about Billy that makes this so?
3. Throughout the novel, an array of stories are recalled—stories drawn from Professor Abernath's Compendium, from the Vaudevillian world of Duchess's father, from Shakespeare, cinema, and the Bible. What role do stories play in the shaping of the different characters' lives and personalities? Are these stories a productive or counterproductive force? What story—whether handed down to you from your parents or experienced in a novel or film—had a particularly strong influence on shaping you as a young person?
4. The novel takes place in the mid-1950s—a period of peace, prosperity, and upward mobility in the US; a period in which television was in its infancy, and which came just before the advents of rock & roll, the modern civil rights movement, and the "sexual revolution". How does the era shape the journeys of the characters, if at all? What aspect of their journeys are unique to their times, and what aspects were shared by you when you were on the verge of adulthood?
5. Hilary—and old friend and member of my book group—observed to me in passing, Well, of course, money is one of the central themes of your book. It's on the minds of all the characters. This hadn't occurred to me for one second! Do you think Hilary is right? On a related note, discuss the broader themes in the novel of moral accounting: of debt and recompense, transgression and atonement, sin and redemption.
6. The City of New York is a thousand cities rolled into one. How does New York differ in the eyes of Emmett, Duchess, Woolly, and Billy?
7. One of the pleasures of writing fiction is discovering upon completion of a project that some thread of imagery has run through the work without your complete awareness—forming, in essence, an unintentional motif. While I was very conscious of the recurrence of Maps & Floorplans in the book, and Photographs, here are a few motifs that I only recognized after the fact: Timepieces such as Billy's surplus watch, the two grandfather clocks, Marceline's pocket watch, and Wallace's officer's watch; Tables, Desks, & Chairs such as the furniture in the doll case at FAO Schwarz, the long table in the dining room at the camp, and the desks of "Dennis" and Professor Abernath; Cases such as the wicker picnic basket, Woolly's cigar box, Harry Hewett's Othello case, and the shoebox of preserves. What role do any of these motifs play in the thematic composition of the book? And if you see me in an airport, can you explain them to me?

8. The tone of each character's chapters differs from the tone of the other characters' chapters. How would you describe the style of the different characters' chapters? To what degree does the style shape your sense of the characters' personalities? How does reading Duchess's first person narrative influence you in comparison to Emmett's third person narrative?
9. Emmett's father leaves Emmett a quotation from Ralph Waldo Emerson's essay "Self-Reliance" as part of his legacy. Do you agree with Emerson's argument that what is within the individual is new to nature, and that we have no idea of what we can achieve until we've tried? What about Emerson's idea strikes you as particularly American? What about this novel strikes you as particularly American? What does self-reliance mean to Emmett, to Duchess, and to Sally?
10. There are a number of smaller legacies in the novel. In addition to the Emerson quotation left to Emmett, there are the recipes handed down to Sally, the officer's watch handed down in the Wolcott family, the St. Christopher medal passed from Billy to Ulysses. What role do these small legacies play within the larger themes of the novel? What smaller legacy have you received that has meant a great deal to you?
11. How would you describe each main character's transformation over the course of the novel? Which character do you think evolves most significantly? Which characters, in your opinion, found what they were looking for? Do you have a favorite character, and why them?
12. A question for those of you who have read my other books: While Rules of Civility covers a year in Katey's life, and A Gentleman in Moscow spans three decades, The Lincoln Highway takes place over just ten days. How does the span of time effect the narrative and your experience of it? What are the benefits and limitations that come with reading a novel spanning days rather than years? While A Gentleman in Moscow and The Lincoln Highway differ in duration, the ending of the two books match each other in a very specific way. What is this commonality? And what are its implications when considering the two stories side by side?
13. Woolly's sister, Sarah, observes to Emmett: "If you take a trait that by all appearances is a merit—a trait that is praised by pastors and poets, a trait that we have come to admire in our friends and hope to foster in our children—and you give it to some poor soul in abundance, it will almost certainly prove an obstacle to their happiness." Do you think this is true? What virtue do you think each of the main characters possesses in excess?
14. Given inflation, $50,000 in 1954 would be the equivalent of about $500,000 today. Late in your discussion, after you've had the chance to share a bottle of wine or a few cocktails, tell each other what you would do if you were suddenly given half a million dollars.

Discussion Questions from bookcompanion.com and the author's website.